

The A.T.T.U.N.E.™ Leadership Framework

"You have the strategy. The part that keeps getting in the way is the human reality."

— Claudia Beck, MCC

A

Awareness

SELF-REGULATION BEFORE
RESPONSE

Leaders who react from unexamined triggers lose authority faster than those who pause.

Notice what is happening internally before it shapes what happens externally.

Strong reactions often signal unspoken pressure, fear, or competing priorities.

What am I carrying into this conversation that does not belong here?

T

Tone

HOW YOU COMMUNICATE
SHAPES EVERY
RELATIONSHIP

The emotional tone you carry enters the room before you speak a word.

Regulated leaders build relationship capital. Reactive leaders spend it faster than they earn it.

Communication that is calm and direct builds the relational foundation that execution depends on.

What is my tone communicating right now, and is it creating clarity or noise?

T

Trust

THE ARCHITECTURE OF HONEST CONVERSATION

Speed of execution is directly proportional to the level of trust in the room.

Leaders who avoid difficult conversations protect the relationship in the short term and destroy it over time.

Honest communication, delivered with care, is the most reliable way to build a lasting working relationship.

Are people able to tell me the hard thing? If not — why not?

U

Understanding

THE QUALITY OF LISTENING
SHAPES EVERY
RELATIONSHIP

What goes unread beneath behavior — fear, pressure, misalignment — becomes political drag.

The presenting issue is rarely the real issue. Go one layer deeper.

The most expensive leadership blind spot is mistaking silence for agreement — relationships erode in that gap.

What is the real issue underneath what I am being told?

N

Naming

CLARITY AS A LEADERSHIP
ACT

Unspoken dynamics do not disappear - they surface as disengagement, politics, or poor decisions.

Naming what others avoid is the communication act that builds the deepest professional trust.

The leaders who say the hard thing clearly and without blame accelerate every process.

What truth in this room am I avoiding naming — and what is that costing?

E

Equilibrium

STABILITY UNDER PRESSURE

Equilibrium is not the absence of pressure. It is the capacity to lead clearly inside it.

Relationships survive pressure not because conflict is avoided, but because repair is done well.

The response to difficulty is always more visible — and more consequential — than the difficulty itself.

Am I leading from equilibrium right now — or from the pressure itself?

A.T.T.U.N.E.™ Leadership Diagnostic

Where does your leadership hold - and where does it cost you?

Every leader has a dimension where they go on autopilot under pressure. This is how you find it.

S = Strength

D = Developing

G = Growth Edge

Awareness

Consistent and with ease.

Present but not yet reliable under pressure.

Costing you trust, speed, or clarity.

I pause to examine my internal state before entering a high-stakes conversation.

I recognize when my reactions are driven by pressure, not by the actual situation.

I can identify what I am carrying into a room and consciously set it aside.

T

Tone

I regulate my emotional presence before speaking in difficult conversations.

My tone creates conditions for alignment rather than defensiveness.

I am aware of the relationship cost of my communication patterns under stress.

T

Trust

I surface tension directly and with curiosity, rather than avoiding or deflecting.

People in my organization tell me the hard things, not just what I want to hear.

I invest in the relationship enough to have the hard conversation — rather than protect the peace.

U

Understanding

I look beneath presenting behaviors to identify what is actually driving them.

I ask questions that invite real reflection rather than defense or compliance.

The quality of my listening creates relationships where people tell me what is actually true.

S D G

N

Naming

I name what is unspoken in the room, even when it is uncomfortable to do so.

I see naming difficult dynamics as a relationship investment, not a relationship risk.

I can surface difficult dynamics without triggering defensiveness or shutdown.

E

Equilibrium

I maintain clarity and steadiness under pressure without suppressing what is real.

After rupture, I repair deliberately — and do not confuse moving on with resolution.

I tend to the relationship after difficult moments — not just the task or the outcome.
